INTRODUCTION

If you're just getting into tunes and want to learn basic jazz repertoire, this album is for you! Organist Hank Marr and drummer Steve Davis (Jamey Aebersold can be heard on organ here and there doing a few touchups) provide a solid foundation for your improvisations, and the tempos aren't too demanding. After you've mastered this album you may want to try other play-a-longs with the same tunes for variety and challenge.

Most of the tunes on this album were written by jazz musicians with an eye toward creating a good vehicle for improvisation. Miles Davis is associated with several; he composed Four and Tune Up in the early fifties, though some sources claim that blues saxophonist-singer Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson actually wrote them. Davis definitely did not write Bye Bye Blackbird, Stablemates, But Not For Me and Oleo, but his recordings of these tunes were important in establishing them as jazz standards. From about 1953 to 1968 one often got the impression that Davis was choosing the repertoire for many other jazz groups by what he recorded. John Coltrane, who first came to prominence in the Miles Davis Quintet, wrote Giant Steps and Moment's Notice, both of which present unique improvising challenges. Tommy Flanagan, who was the pianist on the original "Giant Steps" recording, has said that Coltrane gave him the tune to look at a week before the session, but had not indicated that it was to be played up-tempo! And there is a story that when Coltrane brought an untitled original to a Blue Note record date, trombonist Curtis Fuller took one look at it and said, "Do you really expect me to play this on a moment's notice?", giving Coltrane his title for that tune. Saxophonist Benny Golson has written a number of tunes that have become jazz standards, Along Came Betty and Stablemates among them. The chromatic movement of the chord changes in both tunes and the 14-bar section length in Stablemates keep the soloist from getting bored, to say the least. Both tunes reveal some Golson autobiography - Along Came Betty commemorates a girlfriend, and Stablemates pays tribute to bandleader-educator Herb Pomeroy who Golson was friendly with during his time in Boston in the mid-fifties. Golson used to sit in a lot with Pomeroy's group that played at the Stable, a legendary club there. Charlie Parker's contributions to this set are Confirmation and Blues for Alice. Confirmation is still played a lot on sessions, and the chord structure of Blues for Alice (note the similarity in the harmony of the two tunes, as if Blues for Alice were a blues application of the ideas in Confirmation) has been used for countless other blues lines since. The man Parker once introduced as "My worthy constituent," Dizzy Gillespie, wrote Algo Bueno (aka Woody'n You) in the forties for Woody Herman, but when Woody didn't use it, Dizzy put it in his own band's book with the Algo Bueno ("something good") title. Nica's Dream was written by Horace Silver in honor of the Baroness Pannonica de Koenigswarter, a descendent of the Rothschild family whose patronage of Thelonious Monk and other jazzmen earned her the title the "jazz baroness." Gigi Gryce and Thelonious Monk also wrote tunes for her. Jeannine was pianist-producer Duke Pearson's contribution to the jazz repertoire. Sonny Rollins' Oleo is probably the most played variant on the "Rhythm" changes today (older players also use Lester Leaps In and Cottontail, and Thelonious Monk's Rhythm-A-Ning has its adherents). Teenage composer Billy Strayhorn approached Duke Ellington in 1938, hoping to write for the band; the piece he gave Ellington for appraisal was Lush Life. Ellington (who never recorded the tune, by the way) took him on as a lyricist, and gave Strayhorn, a Pittsburgh native, his New York apartment to work in while he and the band were on a European tour. When Ellington came back several months later, he found that Strayhorn had used the time to study Ellington's scores and (incidentally) compose Take the A Train, a tune that's been done in every conceivable style from a waltz (Oscar Peterson) to rhythm ballad (Glenn Miller). The title refers to a Manhattan subway train (once known as the IRT) and Strayhorn's lyric gives a romantic account of it. Could this lyric have been on Bobby Troup's mind when he wrote Route 66 a couple of years later? Ellington's valve trombonist Juan Tizol wrote Perdido; later arranger Tadd Dameron wrote a bop melody on the changes called Wahoo that often is heard as an outchorus when Perdido is played. And speaking of Tadd Dameron, his Good Bait was very popular among musicians in the forties and fifties. The monothematic idea of using the transposed A section as a release is not new; in fact, the ballad What's New, written several years earlier, has the same melodic economy.

Also on this album are several tunes written by professional popular songwriters who no doubt were pleased with the interest shown in their work by jazz players, but did not write specifically for them. Ray Henderson, who is represented here by Bye Bye Blackbird, is best remembered for his songwriting and publishing venture with BG DeSylva and Lew Brown in the twenties. Also from the twenties is Mean To Me, written by a couple of vaudeville men. Speak Low, September Song and But Not For Me come from Broadway shows, written (the first two by Kurt Weill, the latter by George Gershwin) by men who had also composed successful concert music. Gershwin was probably closer to the jazz world than Weill; the mutual respect that he and jazz musicians had for each other is well documented. Karl Suessdorf, a native of Valdez, Alaska, worked as a pianist/arranger in Hollywood and New York; Benny Carter was among his collaborators. He's best known, though, for writing Moonlight In Vermont with lyricist John Blackburn; guitarist Johnny Smith's version with Stan Getz in the early fifties became a juke box hit. Bart Howard, who wrote Fly Me To The Moon (In Other Words), is a pen name for Howard Gustafson. He was cabaret legend Mabel Mercer's accompanist for four years.

Building a repertoire is an important part of becoming a good jazz musician; the story of an exasperated Sonny Stitt yelling "Don't you know any tunes?" at a young bass player (who has since played and recorded with many leading musicians) has occurred countless times on countless bandstands. Learning the tunes on this album will go a long way toward ensuring that such a humiliation won't happen to you.
